The Leadership Factor

What a Workshop Day Looks Like

Session 1 “All Leaders are Different”

In this session, participants learn how their inborn temperament impacts who they are and what they do best. Individuals learn how to identify their natural leadership style and how to identify other styles of leadership. In this introductory session, we provide an overview of Dr. Keirsey’s research on temperament, and how this affects one’s leadership potential to focus on one’s strengths and build around weaknesses.

Session 2 “Maximizing Your Leadership Potential”

In this session, participants learn how to maximize their unique leadership capabilities and make their deficiencies irrelevant. Participants learn how to strategize their capabilities for a focused mission, and learn tactics for how to grow in their capabilities. In this session, we provide an introduction to Keirsey’s research on talent, intelligence, and development, and how this relates to focusing one’s life for a well defined mission.

Session 3 “Developing your Strengths”

In this session, participants learn how to take their strengths to the next level. Once individuals identify their unique strengths, the next step is to move toward developing them for the long haul. Leaders learn how their wiring pattern can be destructive, or be harnessed to create lasting impact. In this interactive session, we provide an overview on how to create a strategic development plan for one’s natural talents.

Session 4 “Creating a Leadership Culture”

In the day’s final session, we help leaders to create a leadership development culture for their organization. Participants are introduced to a method for identifying top performers, and how to convert this knowledge to more effectively select, develop and retain high performing leaders for their enterprise. In this dynamic session, we introduce a sustainable methodology that can help organizational leaders to select, develop and retain future emerging leaders.
